5th District Congressional Candidate DD ADAMS (D) Joins the Wave of NEW Candidates Hungry for Victory in 2018
May 6, 2017

Last month's impressive showing in Georgia's 6th congressional district special election by Democrat Jon Ossoff, who garnered nearly half of all ballots cast across a wide field, has emboldened many first-time congressional Democratic candidates like third-term City Council Member DD Adams. Adams, from Winston-Salem, NC, is running to unseat Virginia Foxx (R) from the 5th-district office she's held since 2009.

"We watched Ossoff's race closely here in North Carolina, and it gives us hope that we can flip the 5th," says Adams. "Our district has a similar voter demographic. He's an example of the change Democrats are hungry for, and I'm ready to serve."

Democrats need to gain 24 seats to regain control of the House in 2018, and new candidates like third-term City Council Member DD Adams have launched their campaigns early and with full force.

"We know it's a long road until the primaries, but support is already strong for this victory," says Adams, a native of the district she will represent.

With the Trump presidency just past 100 days, it's worth noting the remarkable boost in first-time Democratic candidates running for office in 2018.

"Now is the time. Voters are turning out to hear new ideas and seeking candidates who have a clear vision and a strong voice for progress," says Adams, who retired after 30 years in manufacturing and management. "I'm that voice."
